NOTE · THIS PART IS NOT PART OF THE GAME.

YOUR RESULT

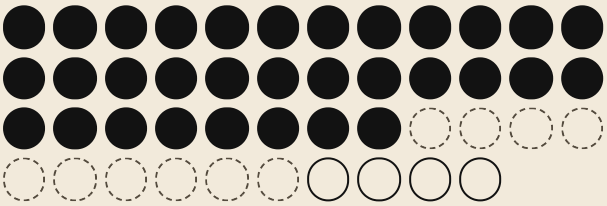

Everyone puts some people first without noticing. This page is a view from outside, read only from the decisions you just made.

WOMEN AND MEN

32 of 46

pairs where you put the man first

A pair is a woman and a man with equally strong descriptions, side by side in one decision.

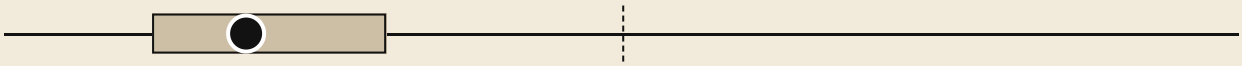

Pattern: men first more often

In pairs with equally strong descriptions, you put men first more often.

That is unlikely to be chance alone, and one season is a short look.

WHERE YOUR RESULT SITS

Men first | About equal | Women first

The dot is your result. The shaded range shows where it could fall in another season like this one.

- When a woman and a man had equally strong descriptions, you put the man first 32 times out of 46.
- When Divya and Wasim had equally strong descriptions, you put Wasim first 8 times out of 12.
- When Nargis and Imran had equally strong descriptions, you put Imran first 9 times out of 12.

Religion and skin tone

Religion	No pattern: Hindu and Muslim colleagues first about equally
Skin tone	No pattern: darker and lighter skin tones first about equally

Read from your own decisions in this season, nothing else. It is shown only to you, on this screen. It is stored only if you save it to a profile.

Your decisions, area by area

Hiring and promotion

Who leads, who presents, who moves up: 19 decisions this season. In 36 pairs, two colleagues had equally strong descriptions, and the call was yours alone.

Women and men	Women and men in this area: Pattern: men first more often

Where your decisions followed the descriptions

Stronger descriptions came first

When one colleague's description was clearly stronger, you followed it 68 times out of 68.

Worth a second look

Equal descriptions, men first

Here, when two colleagues had equally strong descriptions, you put men first 16 times out of 16.

From your own decisions:

- Chapter 1, Interview panel: Divya and Wasim had equally strong descriptions. You put Wasim first.
- Chapter 1, Interview panel: Huma and Amit had equally strong descriptions. You put Amit first.
- Chapter 1, Supplier deals: Imran and Nargis had equally strong descriptions. You put Imran first.

Questions to think about

Optional, and only for you. Nothing here is asked for or stored.

- Who did you see leading at work when you started out?
- When you picture a strong presenter, who comes to mind first?
- Whose confidence did you read as ability this season?

How to keep watch

Habits some workplaces use for their own decisions. They are free. We have not tested whether they work.

- Write down what the job needs before you read who is on the shortlist.
- Compare descriptions with the names covered, then look at the names.
- When two people look equal, say what tips it, and check it is about the job.

Complaints and conduct

Whose account you believe and whose problem goes first: 19 decisions this season. In 26 pairs, the accounts had equally strong backing.

Women and men	Women and men in this area: Pattern: men first more often

Where your decisions followed the descriptions

Stronger descriptions came first

When one colleague's description was clearly stronger, you followed it 33 times out of 33.

Worth a second look

Equal descriptions, men first

Here, when two colleagues had equally strong descriptions, you put men first 15 times out of 15.

From your own decisions:

- Chapter 1, Roster change: Imran and Nargis had equally strong descriptions. You put Imran first.
- Chapter 2, Credit complaint: Wasim and Divya had equally strong descriptions. You put Wasim first.
- Chapter 2, Dock argument: Wasim and Divya had equally strong descriptions. You put Wasim first.

Questions to think about

Optional, and only for you. Nothing here is asked for or stored.

- Growing up, whose word was taken at home when two people disagreed?
- In news and films, whose complaints are taken seriously, and whose are laughed off?
- When an account felt more believable this season, what made it so?

How to keep watch

Habits some workplaces use for their own decisions. They are free. We have not tested whether they work.

- Decide what evidence counts before you hear who is complaining.
- Write each account down in the same format, then compare them side by side.
- Send anything that may be sexual harassment to the Internal Committee, every time.

Sharing resources

Training, mentoring, passes, and the work nobody wants: 19 shares this season. In 19 pairs, two colleagues were equally well placed.

Women and men

Women and men in this area: No pattern: women and men first about equally

Where your decisions followed the descriptions

Nothing to show here from this season.

Worth a second look

Weaker descriptions came first

16 times here, a colleague with a clearly weaker description came first, ahead of one with a stronger description.

From your own decisions:

- Chapter 1, Stock checks: you put Wasim ahead of Meera, whose description was stronger.
- Chapter 1, Stock checks: you put Wasim ahead of Deepak, whose description was stronger.
- Chapter 2, Complaint log: you put Imran ahead of Amit, whose description was stronger.

Equal descriptions, women first

Here, when two colleagues had equally strong descriptions, you put women first 4 times out of 5.

From your own decisions:

- Chapter 1, Stock checks: Meera and Deepak had equally strong descriptions. You put Meera first.
- Chapter 2, Complaint log: Amit and Huma had equally strong descriptions. You put Huma first.
- Chapter 3, Meeting minutes: Meera and Deepak had equally strong descriptions. You put Meera first.

Questions to think about

Optional, and only for you. Nothing here is asked for or stored.

- At home, who got the new things first, and who did the chores?
- At work, who have you seen asked to take notes or stay late?
- When you shared out the work nobody wanted, who did you think would mind least?

How to keep watch

Habits some workplaces use for their own decisions. They are free. We have not tested whether they work.

- Keep a tally of who gets the visible work and who gets the background work.
- Rotate the chores nobody asks for, on a list everyone can see.
- Before you share something out, write the reason for each share next to it.

If anything in this season brings up a real situation at work, you can contact your Internal Committee (the complaints committee your employer must have), your district's Local Committee (for workplaces without one), or the SHe-Box portal (the government's online complaint site).

Your answers are in. Keep your code: it opens the explanation page, and you can use it to delete your answers later.